

ATTENTION, MOTHERS

Here we are with another special showing and sale of Children's and Misses' Coats. Such large assortments you'll wonder where we will find enough people to sell them all to.

But it's not quantity, but quality and style, in these Little Ladies' Coats we are so proud of. Many of them of the "Wooltex" make, made on the same lines and in the same careful manner as Mama's Coat and at prices so ridiculously low that you'll be curious how the tailors can even furnish the cloth at this rate.

We are after the Children's trade. We believe they deserve as much attention as anyone, and we have given this department special attention, searching the markets for the best and most stylish garments made for the money. As a result we offer you this line

For $3.98 Equal values you cannot find in most stores for less than $5.00 or $6.00.

OTHERS FROM $2.98 TO $12.50.

STRAY PICKINGS OF LOCAL INTEREST

A tame fox got loose in the east section of the city the other day and made sad havoc among the hens and chickens in the neighborhood. Try as best they could the neighbors couldn't capture the animal, which took refuge under a lumber pile. Finally one of the men conceived the idea of reaching under the pile and catching the fox by hand. Not being well versed in animal habits he showed perfect willingness to put his idea into operation, while the others with sly glances looked on. The fox-catcher thrust his hand under the lumber pile, when snap went the jaws of the beleaguered animal on the unprotected fingers of the fox-hunter. The man drew his hand hastily from under the pile and the fox with teeth firmly fastened to the flesh came with it. All the shaking that the man gave only added to his tortures. His friends tried the trick of choking the animal, but that failed. Then they brought out a kettle of hot water, but still the pesky animal clung to the hand. Finally an axe was brought into commission and tenacious Mr. Fox loosened his jaws in death. The fox-catcher, dripping sweat from his face and blood from his fingers, remarked: "No hunt fox with me hand again, mebbe."

Ex-Mayor "Tim" Boutwell of Montpelier is generally ready with a story of some sort, and he got back at Dr. J. H. Jackson, the townmaster in the recent Farmers' club banquet, in good style after he had unexpectedly been called on. The townmaster had stated that Jim started eighteen years ago to build up Barre.

"Yes," agreed the well known granite man. "I was walking along the street in Barre when I became very sick, just eighteen years ago. They took me into Dr. Jackson's office and the doctor dosed me up. I was a pretty sick man, but the doctor brought me 'round. When I got able to be out, I asked the doctor what his bill would be."

(The following is the conversation as told.)

"Say, doctor, how much do I owe you for that little medicine you gave me?"

"Well, let me see; that will be just about $10."

"That was the complaint and even-toned reply of the physician."

The bill stunned Jim as it would not stand him now.

"What did you say?"

"Only $10, please."

"Say, doctor, will you tell me what this bloomin' stuff was you gave me?"

"With pleasure. There was about seven cents worth of brandy and then there was about three cents worth of opium."

"Yes," grunted the patient, "but that makes only ten cents. Where's the $9.90?"

"Oh, the $9.90 was what I knew about the case," was the same even-toned answer.

With a look of supreme admiration, Jim paid the bill.

To see our Italian citizens start out for the field and forest in pursuit of game one would think that they were born with a gun in their hands and a penchant for hunting in their brain. There are no people hereabouts that take so naturally to the sport. In the nature of things, they cannot, however, get all the sport that they desire, for the game is not plenty enough. But they have the fun of trying to find Brer Rabbit or Sir Reynard just the same. The other day thirteen Italians and seven dogs returned from an onslaught on the air of the game with one small lean rabbit to exhibit as the trophy of the hunt. Yet the whole thirteen were merry over their experience, while the bounds, which ought naturally to be chagrined over the failure of the day's chase, seemed to catch the cheerful infection of their masters and joined their sonorous voices to the general merriment. In the parlance of athletic sport the Italians were good losers; they took their failure good-naturedly and made the most of the one rabbit.

In the neighboring city of Montpelier there are three streets, whose names show ingenuity and a regard for the proper interrelation of things. First there is Spring street, which leads by gentle slope into Summer street. Then this pleasant pathway of June roses, August sunshine and October gold brings one to that rigorously-named thoroughfare, Winter street. A fire alarm rang in from a box at the intersection of these streets the other evening, and an individual gifted with a wonderful sapience declared that the fire must have been the result of the clash of the seasons, which became so rasping as to cause fusion.

The turkey is having his day, but it will be a short day, indeed, for here are hungry mouths waiting the dinner bell next Thursday. The lordly gobble which struts about in one of the local windows—there's a day of reckoning coming for him. And he seems to have a premonition of what is in store as he nervously peers at the crowd attracted by the novel sight. He doubtless longs for the freedom of the open life in spite of the tempting dishes which are placed in front of him. A splendid-looking bird, he does not know of the speculation which is going on in regard to his probable weight next Thursday, in which the nearest guesser bears off the bird. There will be a happy family next Thursday because of a streak of luck, a lot of little mouths satisfied with the taste of the "gimme some white meat, please," and a hurry call for the family dispenser of pills and powders the next day. There is never some pleasure without some pain. Mr. Gobbler's pain will be brief while the pain of the over-indulgers will be lingering.
